The Title I Neighborhood Resource Center (NRC) invites you to join us for another series of workshops. Each month, Title I NRC staff, along with community partners, facilitate various educational workshops that are designed to increase parents’ knowledge and understanding through stimulating discussions. The Title I NRC’s vision is to provide meaningful family support that increases family engagement and allows parents/caregivers to become effectively involved in their children’s education to improve student academic performance. Research indicates that students achieve more when parents are involved in the educational process. Each workshop we offer has core values embedded. This values-based education allows parents to reinforce the Values Matter Miami Initiative, which has been an integral factor in the District’s improved school culture and behavior. November’s workshops will focus on building capacity for strong parent and family engagement, which also emphasize the core value, citizenship. During this month, parents will also learn about services provided to families living in transition and unaccompanied minors. We hope to see you at our workshops, as we continue our ongoing commitment to increase parent, school, and community participation, communication, and collaboration, with the goal of improving student academic success.
